Beach huts look set to get the nod in boost to tourism

By Chrissie Daniels

chrissie.daniels@archant.co.uk

PLANS to build beach huts on Sheppey in a bid to attract visitors to the island and boost tourism have gathered pace.

Swale Borough Council held a meeting with parish councils and charity Sheppey Matters at the end of last month to see if the idea would be welcomed.

The groups gave their full support to the council plans to push forward with further consultations with more groups and the public.

A council spokesman said they would be looking at running a year-long pilot in which six huts are placed in Leysdown and six in Minster, starting from next year.

If the scheme is successful the council hopes the numbers could increase to up to 24 at each site.

Commissioning and open spaces manager from the council, Len Mayatt, said the feedback received at the meeting was good and that the huts will help to raise Shepney's profile help to raise Sheppey's profile.

He said: "Everywhere that has beach huts people like them. It adds interest, makes it look nice and attracts people to spend money. Local people can use them to get changed and have somewhere to shelter."

Beach huts can be made of wood or more modern materials such as cement planking and fibreglass. These come in a range of colours and have a traditional wood grain effect but resist fire and do not rot, therefore lasting longer.

A wooden hut would cost between £3,000 and £6,000 and a hut made of modern materials between £7,000 and £10,000.

Sheppey Matters manager Nigel Martin said: "It can only help tourism – it's just another reason for going to Sheppey.

"To me, it's a positive step forward that the council is taking this idea on and giving it a go."

Beach huts have proved popular at seaside resorts for years, with Whitstable benefiting from its colourful huts lining the shore

MP for Sittingbourne and Sheppey Gordon Henderson said: "They are very successful down in Whitstable.

"I don't suppose that they are going to attract that many people, but it's part of an overall jigsaw to attract people to Sheppey. It's part of an overall future."

HEALTH

Time is running out to have your say on mental health plans

THE public consultation on NHS plans to treat mental health patients from Swale at one of three centres of excellence comes to a close this month.

Under NHS proposals, 'A' block at Medway Maritime Hospital will no longer treat patients suffering acute mental illness following a report which revealed its services were "unsuitable for 21st century mental health care".

The consultation asks Swale residents which one of the three centres of excellence – Maidstone, Dartford or Canterbury – they would rather travel to when they need hospital admission.

A public meeting to discuss the issue, as well as other NHS proposals, is being held at Sheppey Healthy Living Centre, off the Broadway, Sheerness, from 10am to 1pm on October 19.

It will be attended by mental health consultants and NHS managers who will outline plans and then invite questions and comments from the public.

The NHS launched the three-month consultation in July following a review which found there are not enough hospital beds in east Kent, unsuitable inpatient services in Medway and that better psychiatric intensive outreach services were needed in east Kent.

The new excellence centres will offer state-of-the-art accommodation, with single ensuite rooms, access to outdoor space and improved access to consultant psychiatrists, nursing and therapy teams.

Visit the website www.kmpt.nhs.uk/acute-mental-health-review for more information about the consultation.

Stars rise and fall as Michelin guide recognises fine dining

By Joe Bill

joe.bill@archant.co.uk

CELEBRITY chef Richard Phillips has won back a prestigious Michelin star for his fine-dining restaurant, but there were tears and jeers as another venue saw its star snatched away.

The Michelin Guide 2013 for Great Britain – often referred to as the Red Guide – reviews the best restaurants and presents the finest with the prestigious Michelin star - an internationally acknowledged mark of quality food and service which the leading chefs use to gauge their success

And overall it was good news for Kent, with four restaurants securing the star for 2013.

Most notably was a return for Thackeray's, the Tunbridge Wells restaurant in the former home of 19th century poet and novelist William Makepeace Thackeray.

It made headlines in 2002 when, in its first year under the chef's ownership, it secured a star for Mr Phillips – a familiar face on TV shows such as Ready, Steady, Cook - when he was just 29.

But after three years it lost its star, only for it to be reinstated in the latest guide, which hit bookshops on Friday.

Mr Phillips, who grew up in Rainham and learned his trade at Thanet College before working with the likes of the Roux Brothers and becoming head chef for Marco Piere White in London, said he was delighted.

He explained: "Well done to my entire team - all their hard work has paid off and I'm proud of them all.'

It means a remarkable turnaround for the venue which less than a year ago found itself facing a financial headache, and forced to enter what is know as a Company Voluntary Agreement (CVA) to pay creditors after experiencing cash flow problems. It can now expect to see a surge in customers keen to experience its awardwinning French cuisine.

But there was heartache for Read's in Faversham which lost its star for the first time in more than two decades.

David Pitchford, Read's owner, said: "Obviously, after 20 years, it is very disappointing to lose it, but on a positive note and having talked to our customers, we are proud to have had it so long, and I don't know of many who have held a Michelin star for that length of time with the same chef.

Read's loss of the award was met with some criticism from Gordon Ramsey's former righthand man Mark Sargeant, the owner of Rocksalt in Folkestone. He took to social networking site Twitter to say: Sad day. Over 20 years with a Michelin star and Read's in Faversham lose theirs. I'm not going to get political but * you Michelin.

The Sportsman at Seasalter, near Whitstable, retained its star for another year, as did The West House at Biddenden.

and Apicius at Cranbrook.

However, the headlines were stolen at first by the rather farcical manner in which details of the guide leaked out.

Information began to emerge a week before the release of the book after Michelin accidentally published its findings on its website. They were visible for an hour before being removed - but not before they were spotted and widely circulated. Some have suggested it was simply a publicity stunt for Michelin to whip up interest in the guide.

Elsewhere in Swale, the Three Mariners at Oare was newly added to the Michelin Guide having been awarded the Bib Gourmand.

A Bib Gourmand recognises good cooking at moderate prices" and has often acted as a precursor to being awarded a STAR: Chef Richard Phillips is celebrating Thackeray's reinstated Michelin star Michelin star in the future.

The Plough at Stalisfield Green near Faversham was also a new entry into the Michelin Guide, not winning an award this year but getting a mention as a "pleasant restaurant/pub" wth good food.

IT'S a terrifying prospect - Halloween without

The appalling weather in Kent this year has proved to be a horror story for pumpkin farmers.

The ghoulish rain and cold in early summer made the countryside look more like a set from a gory movie than the Garden of England.

Growing conditions are getting better, but it looks like the improvements are too late to fully resurrect this year's harvest.

Father dies without seeing justice for his murdered daughter

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

THE funeral of the father of unsolved murder victim Claire Tiltman has taken place.

The last member of the tragic family passed away last month without ever knowing who savagely knifed to death his beloved teenage daughter almost 20 years ago.

The Tiltman family had been shrouded in grief since 1993, when the 16-year-old was ambushed in an alley near her home in Greenhithe on the way to see a friend.

The schoolgirl was stabbed more than 40 times, yet managed to crawl several yards back towards her home before finally succumbing to the terrible wounds.

Her devastated parents, Cliff and Lin, were confident the police would trace her killer. After several leads developed their hopes slowly but surely ebbed away, draining the life-force from

The pair, particularly Cliff, were always willing to make repeated appeals for more information to trace Claire's killer. She died just four days after her birthday.

But Lin became ill, and died aged 56 in 2008. Despite the sadness of losing his wife and only child, Cliff still remained determined Claire's killer would be caught.

Last month, after moving in to a nursing home, Cliff also died, having never seen justice for Claire, who was a pupil at Dartford Grammar School for Girls. His funeral was on Tuesday at Eltham Crematorium.

Before he died, he said it would "mean everything" to him if the police secured a breakthrough in the investigation, which has inevitably gone cold over the last two decades, despite more modern analysis procedures having become available.

The 62-year-old said earlier this year: "It's been a long time but I've never given up hope and never will. I can't begin to put into words how this has affected our family. She would have been 35 now. I miss her to bits.

"Claire has gone. Her mum has gone. There is now only me. I try to stay strong but will still hide and cry my eyes out for an hour.'

A name was scribbled on a note and left next to Claire's memorial claiming the man was the killer, but police later ruled him out. Serving prisoners jailed for other offences were named by others, but once more all leads proved fruitless.

Police have always said they believe the killer was probably a local person.

The attack happened just off the busy A226 London Road on January 18, 1993, between 6-6.30pm, when there were many road and Det Chief Insp Rob Vinson from the Kent and Essex Serious Crime Directorate said: "A good man went to his grave without ever seeing justice being served for the murder of his only daughter. This isn't the end of our investigation; we have always maintained that someone has information about this murder and we will continue to investigate it.

"I hope the sad news of Cliff's passing might prompt someone to finally come forward with the key piece of information we need to identify Claire's killer and help us bring this case to a successful conclusion.

Crossing tolls rise this weekend, but M25 plans aim to cut jams

THIS weekend drivers using the Dartford Crossing will be forced to pay even more to use the tunnel or bridge.

TRANSPORT

From Sunday, motorists will see charges rise from £1.50 to £2 for a car, from £2 to £2.50 for lorries, and £3.70 to £5 for heavy goods vehicles.

Further increases will be implemented in 2014.

The Government savs the controversial move will help pay for free-flowing tolls.

But the introduction of this system, similar to London's electronic congestion charging and due to be brought in this year, has been pushed back until 2014.

Dartford MP Gareth Johnson, Kent County Council, and Dartford Borough Council, have raised concerns over the delay, warning that severe congestion at the crossing costs the UK economy £40 million every year through disrupted business.

Ironically, the new charges come ahead of the 10th anniversary of when the bill for the crossing's construction was paid off.

When the first tunnel was built in 1969, the then-Government promised to scrap tolls when enough money had been raised to pay off the costs, which was thought to be in 2003. But this has never happened under either the Labour government or Coalition, and drivers still pay.

Tory backbencher Mr Johnson has been pushing for the charges to be abolished. He said: "I remain opposed to the charge increase and I think the tolls should have been scrapped a long time ago."

The Government is currently looking at long-term solutions to tackle problems at Dartford, including the development of a third Thames crossing.

Meanwhile, views are being sought on plans to bring in variable speed limits on the M25 in Kent and create an extra lane using the hard shoulder. If given the green light, the scheme would run between junction five at Sevenoaks and junction seven, for the M23 in Surrey.

Highways Agency draft plans involve making the hard shoulder available to drivers as a fourth lane and a variable speed limit controlling traffic flows during peak congestion or after a crash.

A six-week consultation, finishing on November 5, has been launched seeking the public's views.

Go to www.highways.gov.uk/ consultations/m25-managedmotorways-consultation/ to comment on the plans.

Estuary airport battle taken to party conference

By Mariike Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

LABOUR members from Medway have taken the fight against a Thames estuary airport to their party conference this week.

Urgent motions on the issue were put forward by representatives from the three Medway constituencies, strongly opposing any proposal for a hub airport in north Kent.

Speaking from the conference, former Labour MP for Gillingham and Rainham, Paul Clark, said a Thames Estuary airport was "nonsensical" and he welcomed the recently launched independent aviation commission, chaired by Sir Howard Davies.

But he stressed the overwhelming feeling from delegates was that the commission's work should conclude before the next general election. Instead, new transport secretary Patrick McLoughlin said it would not be presented until after 2015.

Mr Clark, who spoke at conference fringe events on the subject, said: "Ed Balls said China is now planning 70 new airports; other countries are moving ahead quickly. We need to see this report on the options and a way forward before the next general election.

"When voters go to the ballot box they will know where political parties stand on aviation expansion.

"People know we need a long-term plan for air capacity. It's cowardly that the findings of the report are not being presented until after 2015. From a party point of view, everyone looks at how to win votes, but this delay is unfair on people living in north Kent, in Essex and in Heathrow."

Mr Clark admitted something needed to be done to solve the long-term aviation needs of the country, saying: "All the options need to be reported, before the next general election."

Medway Labour group leader, Cllr Vince Maple, also spoke at a conference fringe event on the Future of UK Aviation, where he raised concerns about the impact of a Thames estuary airport and the potential economic damage that would result if Heathrow was forced to close to make way for such a development. Two separate designs have been drawn up for an airport in PROPOSAL: One of the ideas for in the Thames Estuary is the Gensler floating airport the estuary: one by architect Lord Foster setting out a plan for a multi-billion pound transport hub on the Isle of Grain, including a four-runway airport and connecting rail links; and another, by designers Gensler, for a floating airport with as many as six runways tethered to the seabed.

Conservative party members in north Kent and the Labour Party are fighting against any such plans.

Tory MP for Rochester and Strood Mark Reckless met with David Cameron earlier this year to explain his opposition to a Thames Estuary airport.

POLITICS

Justice secretary says new elected police boss must fight for county – not follow party leaders

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

NEW justice secretary Chris Grayling has denied claims that a party political Police and Crime Commissioner would answer to the party rather than the people of Kent.

The senior Tory, who was sworn in as the new Lord Chancellor this week, stressed that the introduction of the new PCC role was aimed at cutting bureaucracy and devolving responsibility away from central government.

He was responding to arguments made by independent candidates, including Ann Barnes, that politics should be kept out of policing and away from the upcoming PCC role.

Speaking to this newspaper during a visit to Kent, he said he was confident Conservative hopeful Craig Mackinlay, a Medway councillor who he is backing in the race, would do what was best for the county should he be elected.

"There's a long tradition of local government making their own decisions and rightly they should. It would be the same for the PCC," he said.

"I don't think it's right to say a Conservative would follow the party instead of fighting for Kent. (With a Conservative PCC) we're all part of the same team. They would be more likely to be able to speak to central government about an issue.

"This is all about devolving responsibility

LORD CHANCELLOR CHRIS GRAYLING GIVES HIS OPINION ON...

UKIP: "Ukip is like any other party, but if people vote for Ukip it gives Labour a better chance of winning [Tory Craig Mackinlay will go up against Ukip's Piers Wauchope who defeated Tunbridge Wells Borough Council's Tory leader Bob Atwood]. Ukip's platform is all about the EU, not about policing."

JAILS: "The three prisoners [who absconded while on community release] from Blantyre open prison in Goudhurst earlier this year is something I'm concerned about. It's a really difficult balance to find. If we don't have a process in place we can't prepare prisoners for life outside prison, but we need to think of victims." He added: "Rehabilitation is in all of our interests as it helps to reduce re-offending."

Kos Survey: "I think Craig Mackinlay's campaign is going well so far. [In July, KoS carried out a survey to see if people recognised the PCC candidates – 92 per cent said 'no'] He's building a profile and I think this will help more people recognise him. But it's always a battle for politicians to get their faces known."

away from the centre; there will be less bureaucracy and more accountability, people will know who to turn to.

"With police authorities, no-one knew what they were. This is a much better way." He added: "Local council independents have an image of not being party political, but this is an illusion."

Following an election on November 15, the PCC will replace the Kent Police Authority, which currently holds Kent Police to account. They officially take over on November 22 when KPA is dissolved.

The successful candidate will have the power to hire and fire the chief constable, set the police budget, write and publish a police and crime plan, and commission services.

They will hold the force to account. The PCC will be paid £85,000, irrespective of days worked, and will decide how policing money is spent.

Mr Grayling said he was optimistic about Mr Mackinlay's campaign. "This is a county that has always been traditionally Conservative," he said. "But of course you can't take anything for granted. All the candidates will be fronting vigorous campaigns."

Asked whether a PCC would be able to set long-term strategies, despite only being elected for a four-year term, Mr Grayling said this would be possible and pointed to central and local Governments as examples.

He added: "The PCC will take things away from the centre and will have the power to oversee things. What we don't expect to happen is the PCC trying to interfere in operational policing which is run by the chief constable."

The list of prospective candidates include Ashford councillor Harriet Yeo (Labour), Steven Uncles (English Democrats), Piers Wauchope (Ukip), John Botting (National Liberal) and independent hopefuls Ann Barnes, Dai Liyanage, Ken Little, Fran Croucher, and Fergus Wilson. Nomination papers are due on October 19.

Survey urges people to get involved in a bid to tackle rise in disability hate crime

By Chrissie Daniels

chrissie.daniels@archant.co.uk

A PUSH to crackdown on disability hate crimes has been launched, with initial findings already shedding light on some disturbing cases of victimisation.

A charity based in Maidstone is now encouraging people with autism and learning disabilities across Medway to share their experiences of hate crime in a bid to tackle the problem.

The Living in Fear project is spearheaded by mental healty charity the MCCH Society, which also has services across Kent, including Sittingbourne.

The initiative is being operated with the support of Kent Police, the Big Lottery Fund, Autism London and the Tizard Centre at the University of Kent – an academic group specialising in learning difficulties.

If there is a good response, it will be rolled out across the county and follows a survey of police officers.

It is hoped the findings will allow people to share their experience and break down barriers when reporting crime.

The results will help researchers find out how many people have experienced victimisation and if they reported their issue, as well as the impact it had on their lives.

Researchers say they would also like to hear from people who have not been victims. Drop-in sessions will be taking place across Medway for the surveys to be filled in.

The results of the research may help people like Allan, who lives in Medway and has Asperger's syndrome - a type of autism.

He told researchers he was forced to move after he was threatened and called names by neighbours. Allan reported the issue to the police and landlord, who took action.

He said: "One officer who came to see me was very understanding, he told me he has a son with autism and I should contact him if I had problems again. This research will help make sure that wherever they live, anybody who has autism and learning disabilities can get the right support from the police if they are threatened."

Another victim of hate crime is Kathy, who has learning disabilities. She has twice enrolled on education courses but dropped out when she was harassed.

She said: "I loved being with friends and learning. But some people stopped me sitting down on the bus to college and laughed at me. One day I got off the bus early to get away from them and had to walk a long way home. I was scared.

'At college, students swung on the trees outside the classrooms and pulled monkey faces at me and my friends through the window. I decided not to go back.

"I hope lots of people with learning disabilities will do the survey so the police and social services will know what needs to be done so that anybody who wants to be out and about in the community can do that, without feeling scared.'

Colin Guest, MCCH manager. who is coordinating the research,

SPEAK UP: It is thought that a large number of hate crimes go unreported and so this aims to help combat the problem said: "Many people with learning disabilities and autism enjoy active and fulfilling lives, but others have told us of bad experiences which prevent them from enjoying life in their community.'

The Home Office and the Department of Health say disability hate crime is hugely under-reported and that many people with learning disabilities face daily harassment.

DCI Andrew Pritchard, of Kent Police and who is involved in the project, said: "Together we hope to raise awareness of the issue of hate crime towards people with learning disabilities and get a better understanding of what we can do to improve the service of reporting crime for people with social or communication difficulties."

To find out more about the research or how to take part in the confidential survey contact Colin Guest by emailing c.guest@mcch. org.uk or call him on 07584 311943.

AFTER a record-breaking 94 entries to this year's building design awards, the shortlisted developments have been named and includes high-tech houses, an art gallery, and restaurants.

The Kent Design and Development Awards celebrate the best designs in the county and are organised and sponsored by DHA Planning, Kent County Council, and Ward Homes

Its remit is to showcase the best buildings and developments across Kent over the past two years.

It will recognise structures that highlight design excellence within five categories: residential; commercial, industrial and retail; civil and infrastructure: public buildings: and environmental performance. An overall winner will be chosen on the night of the ceremony by the audience.

A panel of judges from industry bodies including the Royal Institute of British Architects and Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors worked their way through the entries to come up with the list of possible winners and will now visit the sites.

KCC leader Cllr Paul Carter said: "Good design and quality developments are essential if we are to continue to maximise on the attractiveness and uniqueness of Kent.

"If you look back at previous years, the recipients were true exemplars of excellent design and development - something we should be extremely proud of. We want to celebrate the first-rate work of developers, architects and professional teams working in Kent, and encourage and promote good practices. That is exactly what these awards aim to do.

The winners will be announced at the Marlowe Theatre, Canterbury, on November 1.

Taste of Kent Awards want your 'food and drink' heroes

PUBLIC voting is now open in the ninth Taste of Kent food and drink awards.

The Produced in Kent competition is expected to receive more than 10,000 online votes at www.tasteofkentawards.co.uk before the poll closes on January 2, 2013.

The Taste of Kent Awards 2013 recognise the county's 'food and drink heroes' and provide the public with an opportunity to vote for their favourite food and drink producers, retailers, restaurants, dining pubs, and farmers' markets.

Following the consumer vote, three finalists in each category will go forward to be judged by mystery shoppers and diners, and an expert panel.

Stephanie Durling of Produced in Kent said: "The awards are seen as a benchmark of food and drink excellence in our county.

"For the outstanding companies that win an award, it is an acknowledgement of their status as the county's 'food and drink heroes' and a stamp of approval from Kent consumers. This is the public's golden opportunity to vote for the food and drink producers with that 'X' factor.

"So no matter who tickles your taste buds, or floats your culinary boat, do make sure you add your votes for your favourite food and drink producers and the most outstanding dining pubs, restaurants, and farmers' markets in Kent."

Two awards introduced last year will return fpr 2013. The Kent Food, Farming and Landscape Award, which has small farm and large farm categories, is a stand-alone section giving farmers the opportunity to enter their farms and businesses directly into the competition on mail@kentdowns.

And the Produced in Kent Special Award, designed to recognise the contribution of an individual or business to the food and drink industry, returns for a second year, too.

The self-nominating awards will again give food and drink producers the opportunity to submit their products to an expert judging panel.

See full details and an application form at www.tasteofkentawards.co.uk.

In addition to the online voting, you can pick up a voting form at farmers' markets.

Final winners will be revealed at a glittering awards dinner on Friday, March 8, 2013 at the Merecure Great Danes Hotel, Hollingbourne.

The overall sponsor is Vertex Law, and there is also support from Barclays Bank, Biddenden Vineyards, Chapel Down Winery, Hadlow College, Kent Downs and High Weald AONB, Kent County Council, Kent Life magazine, kff (Kent Frozen Foods), NFU Mutual, Opies, sff (Stephen's Fresh Foods), Wilkins Kennedy, Shepherd Neame, and Visit Kent. Archant KOS Media is providing media backing.

CRIME

Car key burglars are locked up for more than 20 years

By Chris Britcher

chris.britcher@archant.co.uk

A GANG who targeted homes across Swale, Medway and Maidstone, breaking in to pinch the keys to the expensive cars parked outside, has been locked up.

Six men were sentenced at Maidstone Crown Court for their part in the crime spree, which stretched from September 2011 to January 2012. In total, police investigated around 48 offences.

Danny Stevenson, 27, of Bettescombe Road, Gillingham, and Adam Green, 24, of Hards Town, Chatham, were each sentenced to six years imprisonment.

Jamie Rustage, 21, of Beatty Avenue, Gillingham, and Frank Harris, 19, of Swift Crescent, Chatham, were both sentenced to four years in jail.

James Clark, 21, of Hards Town, Chatham, was sentenced to three years and four months behind bars, and Charlie Bushell, 21, of Kingston

CRIMINAL DRESS: Posing on film in gear used during raids

Crescent, Chatham, received 14 months imprisonment.

Stevenson, Green, Rustage, Harris and Clark all admitted the offence of conspiracy to commit burglary, and Bushell admitted one count of attempted burglary at a previous court appearance.

The first offence took place in the early hours of September 15, when a black Honda CR-V valued at around £20,000 was stolen from the driveway of a house in Harvesters Close, Rainham.

On the same evening a Mercedes-Benz worth £18,000 was taken from the drive of a house in Emsworth Grove, Maidstone, after they broke into a house while the occupants slept upstairs. Another offence took place in Forge Lane, Upchurch, on October 9 when a silver Mercedes-Benz valued at £23,000 was stolen.

The final offence was reported to have taken place on January 7 at a house in Chafes Lane, Upchurch. In this instance an intruder to the property made off empty handed after being challenged by an occupant.

An image was recovered from Stevenson's phone which was shown in court and is believed to represent how the offenders appeared when breaking into victims' premises.

HERITAGE

FANS RESTORE HISTORIC BUS

A GROUP of enthusiasts are celebrating after successfully completing the restoration of an engine to power a restored 1939 doubledecker bus.

The Friends of Chatham Traction is devoted to the Chatham & District Traction Company, which ran bus services over the former tram routes in the Medway towns from 1930 to 1955.

The restored engine is for the last remaining bus - the GKE 68.

Work on the historic engine, undertaken at Tivoli Manufacturing, Chartham, has been supported by a £4,500 community grant from the Rochester Bridge Trust.

The Friends of Chatham Traction are intending to restore the bus to full working order and celebrate the role of the bus company as a key transport provider.

The bus, one of 37 similar vehicles, spent its entire service life working from a Luton depot. It was withdrawn from service in 1955.

Mothers-to-be are urged to get vaccination against deadly whooping cough outbreak

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

A SERIES of baby deaths caused by an outbreak of the contagious whooping cough disease has sparked a warning to expectant mothers to get vaccinated.

Nine babies in England died in the first eight months of this year and there were 302 cases of the disease - a bacterial infection of the lungs and airways - in children under three months.

In the South East, there were 972 cases overall during the same period, mainly in teenagers and young adults, compared to 88 in 2011 and 40 in 2010.

The surge in cases has prompted the Department of Health to bring in a temporary vaccination programme for expectant mothers.

Health chiefs in Kent are now urging women who are 28 weeks pregnant or more to get themselves vaccinated.

Consultant in public health medicine for NHS Kent and Medway, Dr Faiza Khan, said whooping cough is highly contagious and newborns are particularly vulnerable.

"Babies cannot be immunised against whooping cough until they are two months old," she said.

"By having the vaccination while they are pregnant, women can pass on immunity that will protect their child from the day they are born until they are old enough to start being immunised themselves."

New mothers who have not been vaccinated and whose babies haven't yet had the jab are also being offered the vaccine to reduce the risk of passing the disease on.

Dr Khan said: "The vaccination is being offered by GP practices and I urge women who are at least six months pregnant to contact their practice and find out when they can have their jab."

This latest outbreak of whooping cough, which is caused by a bacteria infecting the lining teenagers and young adults, but high numbers have been seen in young babies this year.

Dr Alan Beattie, community paediatrician at Medway NHS Foundation Trust, said: "In the mid-1970s, uptake of the vaccine in Kent was approximately 25 per cent, and in 1982 it was 60 per cent so there is a high chance that pregnant women in their 30s have not been

The decision to introduce the temporary jab programme was made after the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation - the Government's independent vaccine experts - looked at the high number of cases.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Clare Balding strolls in SPORTS presenter Clare Balding was in Rainham Marshes this week, recording the latest episode in her BBC Radio 4 series, Ramblings.

The hugely popular star, a key figure on the BBC's Olympic coverage this summer, joined actor Sam West, son of Prunella Scales and Timothy West, who took her on a trail of some of his favourite walks around the low-lying ancient grazing land on the reserve.

Talk on the V2 rocket

A DISCUSSION on the V2 rockets takes place at Brompton next month, after the site took recent delivery of one of the deadly war-time devices which the Nazis used to rain down terror on the south east.

Author Murray Barber will give a talk on the rockets and discuss his new book, Hitler's Rocket Soldiers, about the men who fired the devices at Britain. It takes place at 7pm on November 30 at the Royal Engineers Museum.

College open day joy

SITTINGBOURNE Community College hailed its open evening this week as a big success, with hundreds of parents and pupils taking the chance to look at the facilities on offer.

Alan Barham, executive headteacher, said: "The amount of interest shown from prospective students and their parents was incredible and the comments and feedback we received were all very positive."

Explorers encouraged to discover Britain with a walk through history

By Chris Britcher

chris.britcher@archant.co.uk

FAVERSHAM has been selected by the Royal Geographical Society as one of the best places to explore in the UK.

The society says it has some of the most interesting and diverse geography and features the town as part of a major new project launched this week.

Discovering Britain aims to explain the stories behind the UK's built and national landscapes through a series of selfled walks.

The walk - called Boats. Bangs, Bricks and Beer – looks at Faversham's justifiable claim to be 'the town that built Britain', focusing on how early settlers utilised the navigable creek to develop industry and

Faversham Creek was perfectly placed with easy access to Europe and London close by, encouraging industries like boat building, brewing, brickmaking and even gunpowder manufacturing.

The four-mile, family-friendly walk goes from the station, through the town centre, to its post-industrial edge and Kent marshes, immortalised in Dickens' Great Expectations.

Director of the Royal Geographical Society, Dr Rita Gardner, said: "Faversham boasts one of the best-preserved medieval streets in England, the country's oldest brewery and played a big role in helping win the Battle of Trafalgar.

"This walk gives you a geographical perspective on the changing fortunes of the town's industries and connections with the wider world.

"We hope people from across the UK will explore the fabulously diverse geography that is on all our doorsteps. Faversham has this in abundance.

The only other Kent walk which forms part of the project is one through the Darent Valley, highlighting how agriculture has been influenced by the slopes, rivers and rocks.

The Royal Geographical Society is an educational charity and the learned society and professional body for geography and geographers.

Founded in 1830, it has had a long and distinguished history in scientific research and exploration and in sharing new knowledge with a range of audiences. Today it supports research, education, expeditions and fieldwork, public enjoyment of geography and transfer of knowledge to policy.

See www.discoveringbritain. org to find out more about the project and to download a map of the Faversham walk.

SHIPSHAPE: Commercial fishing was a mainstay of the Thanet economy during its 19th century heyday

Hooked on past glories of isle's fishing industry

By Chris Murphy

FOR CENTURIES Kent has been famous for its fishing boats, and until recently Thanet had been the centre of the industry.

Now a local author and former maritime museum curator has captured the rise and fall of the fishing fleets that were once commonplace on the waters around Britain.

Michael Hunt's career has always been landbased, but he considers himself a decent enough sailor who missed out on a life at sea.

After being the curator of the Ramsgate Maritime Museum he took to writing about his passion, and has just published A History of the Ramsgate Fishing Industry.

It describes a way of life that was once a mainstay of Thanet's community and economy. A previous work by the historian - A History of Ramsgate Harbour – was re-published last year. Mr Hunt wanted to create a work concentrated on what was once Kent's glory at sea.

The result is a detailed, but highly readable description of a commercial sea fishery.

He said it traces the local industry's earliest moments, through its 19th century heyday, to the still-important fishery of today, albeit far smaller than it once was.

Mr Hunt said the book encompasses 1,000 years of Thanet men and women's engagement with the sea on board herring boats and sailing trawlers. Even the largely forgotten involvement with the Icelandic cod fishery is covered.

The book follows the migration of fishing families and their craft around the coast of Britain, their involvement in the political and economic squabbles of medieval monarchs, and all against a backdrop of the tragedy and heroism endemic to this most dangerous of trades.

He said: "I have always had a passion for sailing and fishing, although my working life has always been land-based.

"I like boats, but I am not a seaman. It is a fascinating business, and this book traces Kent's connections to as far back as I could go. The subject has not been covered properly before."

Areas examined in the book include the development of fishing boats and activities of their crews in peace and war; the rivalries between local and Continental fishermen; and the frequent tragedies of losses through shipwreck, storm or even enemy action during wartime.

Mr Hunt said: "The book has dozens of black and white illustrations along with copious source notes so readers can explore the subject further themselves.'

OPINION

Delivering food to our plates

Meurig Raymond of the NFU argues that the Port of Dover is the best solution for the export of live farm animals to the Continent

RECENT events at the Port of Ramsgate have brought the practice of transporting farm animals, especially to mainland Europe, to the forefront of many people's minds.

I want to state from the outset that the events of that day must be thoroughly investigated. We need to know the part that everyone at the port played in the events which lead to the slaughter of those sheep at the dockside.

We must know what went wrong, what can be learnt from the mistakes made and whether decisions were taken under pressure from animal welfare organisations which departed from agreed contingency plans, escalated the situation, and were not ultimately in the best interests of the animals.

These events have rightly prompted people to ask questions about the wider issue of the movement of animals and it is a topic that the NFU has been engaged with in Europe results in stressed, injured or ill animals and all journeys, espe-

I fully appreciate that to the man on the street there seems little need to transport farm animals, especially over long distances. The Single Market allows people and businesses to move and trade freely across the EU. Moving these animals is an essential part of delivering food to our plates and it is done using vehicles specially designed to protect the animals.

Almost all farm animals across the EU are transported at some stage during their lives from field to field, farm to farm, to the market, or to the abattoir. The important factor is these animals are transported under the right conditions in order that they arrive at their destination fit and healthy.

As well as a moral responsibility to look after animals in our care, livestock are also valuable. It is in no-one's interest to transport them in a way that results in stressed, injured or ill animals and all journeys, especially over long distances, are subject to comprehensive EU regulations designed to safeguard welfare.

Vehicles used for such journeys must be approved by the authorities, drivers must pass tests to transport animals on longer journeys, and all animals travelling out of Britain must be approved by a vet before travel.

In addition, the journey plans must be approved by the Government, including rest stops for the animals and contingencies must be in place to deal with any unforeseen circumstances.

The NFU has been clear that we believe anyone transporting animals has a duty to use the shortest route to their destination. For transport to mainand Europe, this is Dover and longer term we believe animal welfare would be best served by using this port for the majority of animal movements, as is currently the case for milking animals and those destined for breeding purposes.

We are committed to working to improve animal welfare during transport for all operations. This must be focused on the conditions of transport and the rigorous enforcement of the regulations across the EU, rather than arbitrary limits on time, or the fact that an animal is travelling over water or over a national border.

The NFU will continue to work closely with government agencies to safeguard animal welfare in these operations, but any changes to legislation must be based on sound scientific studies and made at an EU level to keep a level playing field throughout Europe for our farming businesses.

College crisis a threat to more than just jobs

THIS week Labour leader Ed Miliband spoke at his party's conference, vowing to drive up standards in apprenticeships and vocational courses so they were no longer seen as "second best" to university.

And so it came with disappointment that one the county's colleges, which runs a host of vocational courses, is facing an uncertain future.

Quite rightly there are fears of hundreds of jobs losses. But perhaps more worrying is the axe that hangs over further education provision at the college, which caters for more than 9,000 students. Vocational subjects play a big part in Kent's educational make-up, so to put this at risk could threaten the futures of countless young people.

Vulnerable put at risk by KCC

MANY people will not be aware that Kent County Council is preparing to cut £18.8 million from adult social care in the next year.

At a time when 7,000 older and disabled people have been told they no longer qualify for help, we hear the Government has underspent by £6.7 billion on their public spending budget this year.

This Conservative county council, instead of standing up to their government, are quite prepared to slash the budget to the most vulnerable and needy people within our

The next biggest budget cut proposal in Kent is to the looked-after children fund; children who are very often without parents, or have families unable to care for them.

Older people, the disabled, and children are the ones set to suffer the most under these County Hall proposals.

More and more our KCC is depending on the voluntary sector to provide the support that people need while at the same time reducing the grants paid to organisations to do the work that local authorities should carry out.

There is no mention in the consultation document of any cut to the vast payments and travel expenses paid yearly to their councillors.

Some of these people, publicly-elected into power, are receiving money from the public purse which is almost immoral.

Next April cheques for £44,000-plus will land on the door mats of the richest in the land while many people this winter will be cold and using food banks in order to survive

These Conservative people certainly know where their priorities lie.

Just take my money, please

I RECENTLY attempted to pay my council tax at the local council offices - remember the Bible states "Render unto Caeser the things that are Caeser's".

However, the district council have a different view.

At the offices I told the woman on the desk I wanted to pay my council tax.

"Do you wish to pay by debit or credit card?" she enquired.

"No, I wish to pay by cash" was my reply.

She then informed me they didn't take cash, I would have to pay cash at a Post Office or at something called a Payzone.

I walked across Pencester Gardens and noticed a newsagent which advertised they were a 'PayPoint' so I queued up, only be told: "No, this is a PayPoint, you need a Payzone or the Post Office.'

I hadn't realised there was such a difference.

My next port of call was the long queues at the Post Office, but eventually, mission accomplished, I have paid my council tax.

However, what I cannot believe is that I have got the cash, the council want my cash, but I have to go somewhere else for them to charge the council for taking my cash.

Silent attack on all drivers

IN 2007, the Government backed down after 1.8 million people signed a petition against road pricing.

Wary of that, the newlyelected Coalition government promised not to bring in road pricing (other than for lorries) or even prepare for it.

Although the Government would consider levying tolls on totally new major roads like motorways, we were assured our existing roads would not be tolled.

There is now, however, the threat of major routes in England effectively being sold off, and the public being charged to use existing roads.

The Government has quietly started engaging with local authorities with a view to softening up public opinion.

The driving public has paid something like £500 billion into the roads since 1997. with only a fraction spent back. To charge us even more for driving on inadequate roads would be adding insult to injury.

There is actually money for improving our roads, only it is spent on the wrong things like HS2 and financing roads in other developed countries.

The Government should get its priorities right instead of reaching into our pockets.

Held to account over dead relative's wishes

AS EXECUTOR of a relative's will, I have been told by a building society that I must indemnify it before receiving funds from the deceased's account.

Should I agree, or try to find insurance cover against the unlikely event of someone laying claim to the funds?

IF YOU have a Grant of Probate, that should be enough. It entitles you to collect together the deceased's assets, pay any bills and distribute the balance to beneficiaries under the will.

You have told me that you and your brother are the only surviving relatives, so the chances of a rival claim are remote.

I would sign the indemnity, promising to take responsibility if there is any dispute.

But I would also question why the society expects it in the first place.

IT APPEARS I am among the 12,000 people you mentioned recently who have received penalty notices for failing to fill in a tax return.

I have received penalties covering the three years to 2012, and I have lost count of the amount I am supposed to owe, which increases by £10 a day.

As a pensioner with a personal income of just £64 a week, the hassle is making me ill.

I REPORTED that 12,000 people had received penalty letters in April after being told earlier by HM Revenue & Customs that they did not have to complete a tax return at all.

But you are in a league of your own, with fines going back three years when your income is clearly below the starting point for income tax.

If you have not already done so, appeal against the penalties so there is a record on your file.

If this does not work, contact the Revenue Adjudicator (0300 057 1111).

She is an outside referee who investigates complaints against tax officials and can overrule them.

I HAVE been thinking of opening a Regular Saver account with Nationwide, which is offering 6pc interest, but I am told I would also have to move my main bank account to Nationwide.

I am reluctant to leave Natwest, partly because I have a Natwest mortgage that I may wish to renew.

Is there any reason why I could not have accounts with both?

TO QUALIFY for the regular saver account and its above-average interest, Nationwide says you must have its Flexaccount as your main current account.

If you do not already have a Flexaccount, you must ask Nationwide to arrange to transfer your business from Natwest, which would mean, of course, that Nationwide would close your Natwest account.

There is nothing to stop you opening a Flexaccount yourself, without using Nationwide's account transfer service.

But in that case, the society says you would have to pay at least £750 a month into the Flexaccount for the next three months, before qualifying for the Regular Sayer deal.

This seems a lot of trouble to go to, just to get 6pc interest on a maximum of £250 monthly regular savings, when this interest rate lasts only until October next year.

If you are on good terms with Natwest and are likely to renew your home loan with the bank, I think I would stay put.

I PAY someone local £30 a week to take care of my garden. It has been suggested that this makes me liable for his income tax and national insurance, which would be extremely worrying

I HAVE received several letters from readers with the same concern, after a recent statement from a government minister condemned the whole idea of paying people cash in hand.

Legally, your gardener is almost certain to be self-employed, and not your employee.

This lets you off the hook completely. But even if he is classed as an employee, £30 is well below the starting point for tax and national insurance.

Pay anything less than £107 a week and you avoid all form-filling for the Revenue unless you are fully aware that he has other income that brings him into the tax net.

A wave of unrest as 'sea change' hits child benefit

It is worth seeing if you can mitigate the forthcoming changes to child benefit. ADAM AIKEN reports

FAMILY MATTERS:

There are ways to avoid missing out on child benefits, even if you are earning over the £50,000 a year which will see many UK families lose out NEARLY 850,000 families are likely to be hit by changes to child benefit in a few months' time.

Experts are warning of a "sea change" to the whole system when updates to the process are introduced in the new year.

From January, child benefit will be means-tested and will affect anybody earning more than £50,000 a year.

"At this income level, there will be

"At this income level, there will be a charge of 1pc of the full child benefit for every £100 of income until all the benefit is lost at £60,000," said Murray Graham, a partner at chartered accountants Loyewell Blake.

At the moment, families receive child benefit of £1,055 a year for the first child and a further £696 a year for each additional child.

That means a high-earning family with three children aged under 16 could find themselves £2,450 a year worse off under the new rules.

The responsibility to report the child benefit will fall to the highest earner in the family – but that person will have no right to stop the benefit being received if the recipient in the household is someone else.

"The highest earner in the family must include the benefit payments on a self-assessment tax return each year and will have to repay any excess benefit received, regardless of who actually received it in the first place," Mr Graham said.

"However, the payments will not be stopped unless requested, but will instead have to be repaid after the year end.

"If the highest earner is the recipient, he or she can ask for payments to be stopped. If the lower earner receives the benefit, the higher earner has no power to make them stop receiving payments, but will remain the responsible person for repaying any excess each year."

He added: "It is important to note that if a choice is made not to receive payments, the eligible partner (generally the mother) must still register the birth with the Child Benefit Office as normal. This is important from a national insurance point of view and will provide credits towards future state pension entitlement under the Home Responsibilities Protection plan."

For any families hoping to sneak under the wire, Mr Graham warned that HM Revenue & Customs would be cross-checking tax and child benefit records and would enforce penalties for non-compliance and non-payment.

"Broadly speaking, interest on late payment is charged at 3pc a year plus an additional 5pc of tax still owed after 30 days, then a further 5pc after six months and another 5pc after 12 months," he said.

"Couples should agree who is the higher earner and will report the benefit each year, or come to an agreement where the recipient submits a request that payments be stopped."

But there could be ways to maintain your child benefit if you take some financial-planning steps in advance.

Mr Graham said someone's annual income, for self-assessment purposes, can be reduced by boosting the amount being put away for a pension or by using childcare vouchers.

Alternatively, there might be the opportunity to consider a salary-sacrifice scheme (which involves taking a smaller salary in return for nontaxable benefits in kind, such as a higher pension contribution from an employer) or to review the benefits of having a company car or other addons that do attract tax.

Matthew Stephens, a tax expert at Prudential, said the option to increase pension contributions could prove worthwhile.

"The new child benefit tax charge will be a real blow for many families next year, particularly in households where salaries are unevenly distributed and one parent is the main or sole breadwinner," he said.

"There is, however, a strong case for a parent whose income is between £50,000 and £60,000 to make additional pension savings to avoid the new tax, and at the same time boost their retirement income.

"Often people believe they can't afford to save, but... not saving for retirement could be a far more costly option."

Sarah Gleadell, a pensions and childcare-voucher expert at NW Brown, said HMRC would write to taxpayers soon with more details and to explain what they needed to do next. But she said that her own household would probably opt to receive childcare vouchers.

"People who think they will be affected by the change need to work out if they will be worse off taking the charge or choosing not to receive child benefit," she said.

Ms Gleadell recommended that people used HMRC's online calculator to see if they would be better off with childcare youchers.

Docks scheme could spark brighter future for Medway

By Nick Ames

nick ames@archant.co.uk

A HUGE development in north Kent is expected to bring some 3,500 jobs, hundreds of homes, a hotel, a supermarket and a conference and events centre to the banks of the River Medway.

The Chatham Waters project at Chatham Docks has been approved by the Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government Eric Pickles - a decision that it is hoped will allow the area to be transformed.

Medway Council's planning committee agreed plans for the development in July, before it was referred to the Secretary of State for final approval.

The 26-acre site will see £650 million invested, providing an employment-led mixed-use redevelopment.

It will be built by Peel Land and Property, one of the UK's leading construction companies.

Jane Chitty, Medway Council portfolio holder for economic growth and strategic development, said: "This is extremely good news and I am always excited when someone shows they rate Medway and recognise it is a place to develop and do business in."

The developers are confident that the $1.9\ \mathrm{mil}$ lion sq ft area will be transformed and plan office space, education facilities, an 'Event City' conference centre and a hotel alongside 950 apartments and townhouses and a supermarket.

There will also be a civic square lined by large sweeping parkland boulevards and other open spaces for recreation.

Cllr Chitty said: "This investment is from a private developer and shows just how far Medway has come in recent years. The area has a very good reputation for recognising the value of business - and of the value of local people.

FUTURE'S BRIGHT: The 26-acre site at Chatham Docks will host a hotel, supermarket, conference and event centre and hundreds of new homes

"There are a lot of people with a wide range of skills here and they are willing to work.

Peel Land and Property already owns the land at Chatham Docks and the family-run firm has an impressive pedigree.

It has developed projects such as Glasgow Harbour and the huge Trafford Centre shopping destination in Manchester.

It is also behind the Liverpool and Wirral Waters schemes – a huge plan to invest £10 billion redeveloping redundant docks in Mersey-

The firm's most well-known scheme is Media City at Salford Quays in Greater Manchester. This huge development has been built to provide a new home for world-famous media names including the BBC, ITV and Coronation Street. Salford Quays is also home to hotels, the Lowry and Imperial War Museum North and the University of Salford Medway Council will now work with the developers to finalise legal agreements.

Rodney Chambers, leader of Medway Council, said: "This is a major step forward for the regeneration of Medway and is a clear indication of how the area is growing and continuing to attract significant investment.'

'Not only will it create thousands of jobs for residents in the near future, but it will provide opportunities for future growth and unrivalled facilities for residents and visitors alike to enjoy and benefit from."

Manston-owner Infratil plays down reports of potential bid for Stansted

INFRATIL, the New Zealand company that owns Manston airport, is remaining cool about rumours that it is part of a consortium preparing a bid for Stansted

Reports from New Zealand have suggested that Infratil is part of a group involving the New Zealand Superannuation Fund, which has formed 'a bid team' to buy the Essex airport, which competition regulators have ordered its Spanish owner to sell.

However, Steve Fitzgerald, from Infratil's management company Morrison & Co and who runs Infratil's airports business, said nothing had been formalised and played down the suggestions that Infratil had signed a confidentiality agreement to gain access to Stansted's books.

He said: "At Morrison & Co we look at all airport transactions globally to see whether any of them might fit the investment criteria.'

The management company has other business interests as well as Infratil, which has wide-ranging concerns itself, including transport and natural resources.

Spanish company Ferrovial bought control of British Airports Authority in 2006 but was ordered by competition authorities to sell Gatwick, Stansted

Business bank 'far from perfect but step in right direction', says chamber chief

PLANS for a British business bank have won the cautious backing of Jo James, chief executive of Kent Invicta Chamber of Commerce.

She said she welcomed the Government's proposal to put £1 billion into setting up a bank designed to increase the amount of lending to businesses, announced by Vince Cable.

The Business Secretary said the move was to help many small and medium-sized companies that had struggled for credit since the financial

The bank will operate via existing lenders and start within 18 months. It is intended the money will be matched by private-sector investment, substantially increasing the sum available.

The details of where the statefunding will come from and the bank's operation will not be made public until Wednesday, December 5, Lib Dem officials said.

Ms James said: "The British Chambers of Commerce has been actively campaigning for the creation of such an institution and it is encouraging that it appears the Government is beginning to respond to the suggestions of the business community.

"Whilst it does seem the scheme is far from perfect, it is certainly a step in the right direction.

Double whammy for Hornby as disappointing Olympic sales and manufacturing woes see company fail to record a profit

Hornby has said it will not make a profit this year due to disappointing sales of London 2012 merchandise and disruption to production at its supplier in China.

And following its announcement, the company's shares fell about 40 per cent to 50 pence in the first few minutes of trading last week.

Lower-than-expected sales of Olympics products meant retailers cancelled repeat orders, so the firm now only expects to break even in the 2012-13 financial year. Last year it recored profits of £4.5 million. Hornby, which owns the Airfix, Scalextric and Corgi brands, gained the licence to sell a range of London 2012 merchandising

The company said initial orders from retailers before the Games had been good, and consumer purchases of Hornby goods were encouraging.

But retailers had bought large amounts of 2012 merchandise Hornby from a range of companies and had was badly to slash prices after slow sales. hit by lack

The firm said it would try to find alternative sources of products to try to reduce the disruption created by its Chinese supplier, which is rationalising its output.

Hornby is now offering up to 85 per cent off its Olympic and Paralympic ranges, which include model London 2012 taxis. Olympicthemed train sets and die-cast athlete figurines.

Brewer bubbling over after posting record turnover

BRITAIN'S oldest brewer Shepherd Neame has defied the gloomy economic climate by posting a record turnover

The company has also continued its investment in property by buying pubs and hotels throughout the last year.

Turnover at the Faversham firm over the year to June 30 was up 9.6 per cent to a record £133 million, from £121m in 2011. Profits before tax climbed 39.7 per cent to £9.1m.

Total beer sales rose by 5.6 per cent, with the brands Spitfire and Asahi Super Dry performing particularly well against a UK-wide market decline of 1.2 per cent. Liquor sales rose 6.2 per cent and food income was 10.9 per cent higher.

Part of the rise was due to the seven pubs and hotels bought by the chain over the period. However, total like-for-like sales, which excludes those new sites, still saw a growth of

Shepherd Neame's hotel income increased by 7 per cent and since the end of the results period it has also purchased the Royal Wells Hotel in Tunbridge Wells, taking the total number of accommodation rooms owned by the company to 499.

Chief executive Jonathan Neame said: "This has been another successful year. Our beer, food and accommodation sales have all enjoyed strong growth for the second year in a row and the tenanted estate performance has been encouraging.

"Our strategy to invest in our pubs and brands during the economic downturn has strengthened the company, improved its competitive position and enhanced our reputation with consumers. Recent pub acquisitions have been successful and this has enabled us to take another step forward this vear with some further excellent purchases. which provides a good platform for the future."

Last year the company sold 84.1 million pints. The majority were in the UK, but it also exports to more then 20 markets abroad.

Asahi Super Dry saw a massive 20.4 per cent rise, with brand partnerships established with a London gallery and a beach resort in Cornwall.

Ever-changing employment legislation in danger of locking unemployed out of workplace

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

INCREASING regulation can lock people out of the workforce and so a different approach is needed for small and large firms... the message was clear from the Federation of Small Businesses to Labour at the party's conference in Manchester.

The federation said that small firms bore a disproportionate amount of the regulatory burden, particularly around ever-changing employment legislation.

While small firms recognise that employment legislation benefits those already in employment, the FSB is concerned that, by introducing new regulations, disadvantaged groups will be locked out of the workforce.

This is because regulation increases the risks associated with hiring, which are particularly acute for small businesses, and can affect employers' willingness to hire in the first place.

The FSB argued it was small firms that created jobs and took on people who were shut out of the labour market: more than eight in 10 unemployed people who found work did so with a small business

By creating policies that undermined the flexibility of small firms to recruit staff, they would become less able to take on those seeking employment, said the FSB.

The increasing scale of regulation also meant growth prospects were slowed and confidence to take on staff was reduced, it was claimed.

A recent FSB survey showed that 30 per cent of respondents believed employment law was a barrier to taking on new staff, and 26 per cent

WARNING: Roger House, FSB county chairman

suggested that general regulation limited their operations.

More than one in five (21 per cent) said the risk of litigation or employment tribunals was a significant factor limiting recruitment.

Roger House, FSB chairman for Kent and Medway, said: "Taking a one-size-fits-all approach doesn't always work. Too many policymakers don't think about the consequences of policy for small firms or for the people that are on the outside of the jobs market trying to get in.

Those people are more likely to be taken on by a small business due to their flexibility, and so constant tinkering with the system will undermine this flexibility and result in fewer jobs being created.

"We know employment legislation is designed to protect those already in employment, but it doesn't help the people who are not working and it can make it more difficult for them to get a job in the first place.

The FSB is urging all political parties to recognise the importance of ensuring that small firms can operate as flexibly as possible to create the jobs needed in the current economic climate.

It would like to see:

- An exemption for micro and small firms from the right to request flexible working. Many small firms will do this informally where it is appropriate for the business and so don't need the added administration of formal requests.
- Changes to the onerous reporting requirements that will be placed on self-employed individuals when the Universal Credit system comes into force. These requirements will have a significant administrative and cost burden on self-employed individuals and will discourage entrepreneurship.
- A full exemption for micro-firms from burdensome pensions auto-enrolment, due to come into effect from 2017.
- The National Insurance Contributions holiday extended to all small firms across the UK that have fewer than four employees that take on up to an additional three.

New regional networking hub offers SMEs a better chance to get connected

FOLLOWING the success of their individual networking hubs, Basepoint business centres across the county have joined forces to form a regional networking hub at Basepoint Canterbury for all SMEs in the

Among those speaking at the first hub event will be Ashley Connell, of London Village

Rentals (a licensee at Basepoint Chatham), and Josh Whitten, of Whitten Marketing - a licensee at Basepoint Folkestone.

Both will discuss how to make the most of entrepreneurial opportunities in business and the importance of social media for businesses. Basepoint is a UK-wide project that provides business support and facilities.

Hazel Causer, Basepoint area manager, said: "The aim of Basepoint's regional networking hubs is to bring local businesses together to create new business opportunities.

. "To celebrate the local area, the event will have a Kentish

"All attendees should expect hay hops, Kentish apple juice, ice-cream and, of course, fantastic talks from our speakers and all-important networking."

The regional networking event will take place at the Canterbury Innovation Centre on Tuesday, October 9, from 11am-2pm.

For further information, or to book a place, you can email michellegagie@basepoint.co.uk or phone 01474 338701.

Training, courses and careers

Potential students offered a taste of life at university

THE University of Greenwich is holding an open day at its Kent campus for prospective students.

The event on Saturday, October 13, from 10am-3pm is aimed at all those considering university next year, and is at the Medway campus at Chatham Maritime.

Students and lecturers will be available to answer questions and show visitors around, and there will be displays and talks by staff.

"Taster sessions and introductory talks will be available to give the best possible idea of what it would be like to study at the university," said Beverley Woodhams, who is head of recruitment at the University of Greenwich.

The university says that according to the latest National Student Survey, 85 per cent of Greenwich's final-year students say they are definitely or mostly satisfied with the quality of their degree courses.

Greenwich is among the top five institutions nationally for students who are definitely or mostly satisfied with their course in law, and in engineering and technology.

Medway School of Pharmacy, which is run jointly by the universities of Greenwich and Kent, is ranked in the top five of all universities and HE colleges in the whole country, with a 92 per cent overall satisfaction score.

The university is home to nearly 28,000 students, representing more than 100 countries across the world.

They pursue academic interests from a choice of more than 1,200 teaching programmes to study. The range of subjects available includes architecture and design, business studies, education, engineering, nursing, and sciences. There are also opportunities for further research and postgraduate study.

New test centre can help students get into industry

PEOPLE looking to start a career in construction or IT support can now take essential industry exams at Canterbury College's Swale campus.

Exams for the Construction Skills Certification Scheme (CSCS) and Microsoft Technical Courses can be taken at the college's newlyopened Prometric Testing Centre, which is the only one of its kind in Swale.

The CSCS must be passed before someone can work on a building site and the industry-recognised Microsoft Technical Courses can lead to jobs in IT support, or database administration.

Before the Swale Campus' Prometric Testing Centre opened, the nearest CSCS exams were held in Canterbury and Microsoft Technical Course tests were in Maidstone.

There are also plans for the Swale campus to host the DSA Driving Theory and other exams.

The college's head of corporate IT, said Jan Hughes said: "The college is very proud to offer these exams which are invaluable to anybody wanting to get started in construction or IT.

"This will be a massive help to people in the area who would have struggled getting to exams held further away. We're looking forward to adding to the exams that can be taken here in the future."

The Prometric room has a dedicated exam invigilator and computers that run independently of the college's computing network to ensure fair testing.

Sweet shop manager presented with retail learner gong by Dragon

RICKIE Strevens from Swanscombe, has won the Retail Learner of the Year 2012 award,

She was presented with her prize by Dragons' Den star Theo Paphitis, after she studied the Retail Works programme at the Learning Shop in Bluewater, which is part of North West Kent College.

More than 500 key retailers from across the country gathered at the Grosvenor House Hotel in London's Park Lane, London, for Retail Week's 2012 Skillsmart Retail Rising Star Awards, to celebrate the achievements of the up-and-coming stars of retail.

Rickie, who is manager of Mr Simms Olde Sweet Shoppe in Bluewater, was nominated for Retail Learner of the Year 2012 for the hard work and success she achieved in her position at the store, and through the eight-week part-time Retail Works programme she undertook at the Learning Shop.

In less than a year, Rickie was promoted to manager of Mr Simms Olde Sweet Shop and currently works with the Learning Shop to provide other learners with opportunities of experience and apprenticeships with the business.

She said: "It took me less than a year to progress from sales assistant to store manager and this would not have been possible without the Retail Works course, not only for the skills it taught me and confidence it gave me but also for the way it introduced me to how qualifications and development are an essential part of your retail career.

"Thank you to everyone who had faith in me."

The Retail Learner of the Year 2012 Award category was open to learners who had completed or embarked on a retail qualification which resulted in Community fund cash will help train the radio presenters of the future

FOLKESTONE'S community radio station, 105.9 Academy FM Folkestone, has won funding to run a project that trains local people to become radio reporters.

Our Community Communicates project has secured funding of £16,800 from the Community Learning Innovation Fund, to teach adults from the age of 19-years-old upwards, the skills need to interview different people in the community.

Over the next year, Academy FM will train local people to research and conduct interviews on subjects that impact how on how live people in the community live their lives. The project will involve giving training to 36 adults.

Academy FM's head of news Sarah Carre said: "Many of the interviews recorded will be broadcast on Academy FM

"It's important that people can be involved in their community and feel they can ask the questions to the right people. Whether it's local politics or services, community issues, health, education, or anything else with a local focus, we're happy to discuss it.

"In this project, local people will become radio reporters covering the issues that matter to them. Anyone interested in being trained in interviewing skills should call me in the office on 01303 721059 or email sarah.carre@academy-fmfolkestone.com."

Academy FM is a community radio station and a charity, based in Folkestone Academy School

Nearly all of the presenters are volunteers from the local community, including many young people.

The station says it has a strong educational focus, with many young people learning communication skills, teamwork, self-confidence, and skills for the workplace.

The Community Learning Innovation Fund, from the Skills Funding Agency and managed by NIACE, will contribute to the Government's objectives for community learning.

The fund will deliver new and creative learning opportunities, particularly for disadvantaged people through learning to support social and economic well-being, digital inclusion and stronger families and communities.

For more information about the fund you can visit www.niace.org.uk/clif.

The Margate mass Mobot is a golden celebration

MARGATE performed a mass Mobot in celebration of the town and its young people at the annual Hartsdown Academy awards night.

During a speech highlighting the academy's achievements of the last 12 months, executive head Andy Somers invited the audience of civic dignitaries, VIP guests, students, families, friends, governors and staff to rise and join him in the Mobot celebration made famous worldwide by Olympic gold medallist Mo Farah.

But this time the M stood for Margate. Mr Somers said: "The theme for this year's Olympics 2012 was Inspire A Generation. I firmly believe that is what we do so well at Hartsdown - inspire generations of young people

"We are proud of our students, proud of our success, and proud of Margate.

"I believe everyone associated with Hartsdown deserves a gold medal. I know we can't afford them but we can afford to celebrate.

"So I can't think of a better way to demonstrate our feelings than with that fantastic Mobot gold winning celebration from the Olympics - but this time the M stands for Margate.'

GOLD MEDAL EVENT: The crowd does the Mobot

Another highlight of the evening at the Winter Gardens was an appearance on stage by Mayoress Cllr Jodie Hibbert, who joined the award-winning Hart Sounds choir on lead vocal for a performance of High by the Lighthouse Family.

There was an Olympic theme to Mr Somers' speech. He said: "The last 12 months will be remembered as the year we outstripped our previous personal best performances across the board and continued to shine as brightly as an Olympic flame

We enjoyed gold star performances throughout the most successful and busiest year in our proud history.

"And that is due to the fantastic determination and enthusiasm of our students, the sheer professional dedication of our staff, and the tremendous support we receive from out governors, parents and families.

Spires Academy starts new year in state-of-the-art £13.4m building marked the beginning of a new era for Spires Academy as the doors opened on its architectdesigned £13.4m building.

Students left behind their old school, which began life as Sturry Central in 1937, to walk into the state-of-the-art premises.

The light-filled, ultra-modern academy has been designed by London architects Iestico + Whiles for construction firm Carillion.

Work started on the 5,872 sqm building in March, 2011, and was completed on schedule for its opening last month.

The new academy in Sturry is designed to accommodate 600 students in six learning areas and is built around a central hub or 'heart space', where the cafeteria is also situated.

Headteacher Nicki Mattin said: "It has been a smooth transition into the new building and it was a wonderful experience watching the awestruck expressions of the students as they arrived on the first day.

"The design of the building works extremely well, creating a calm, purposeful atmosphere, with a central space that is the heart and soul of the academy."

Highlights of the building include a dance studio and amphitheatre for outdoor performance, plus a recording studio with 16channel mixing desk, which provide a platform to showcase the academy's specialism of visual creative and performing arts.

Animal care student raises funds for RSCPA with a climb up Kilimanjaro

AN animal care student from Canterbury College has raised hundreds of pounds for an RSPCA centre by climbing Mount Kilimanjaro.

Jonathan Stevens, 18, from Ramsgate, made £400 for the Woodchurch Animal Centre near Birchington by scaling Africa's tallest mountain during his summer holiday.

Jonathan, who studies introduction to dog grooming at the college and volunteers at the animal centre part-time, was sponsored by his tutors and classmates.

His trip lasted a fortnight and $covered\ two\ mountains-Meru$ which is 14,977ft high and which he climbed as preparation for tackling Kilimanjaro which stands at 19,341ft above sea level.

Jonathan, who is used to encountering dogs, parrots, meerkats, birds and tortoises at Canterbury College's Animal Care department, came face to face with wild monkeys, elephants and giraffes.

It took him five days to get to the top of Kilimanjaro and two more days to get back down.

Jonathan said: "I wanted to climb Mount Kilimanjaro to challenge myself and because it would be a once in a lifetime experience.'

IE INTERVIEW

Paul Zerdin

HE resounding image that shoots through many people's minds when the word ventriloquist is uttered is black-and-white television footage of an elderly gentleman holding a wooden doll, writes Joe Bill.

The doll is smoking, wearing a monocle and referred to as Lord Percy or similar. It is all a bit odd. But Paul Zerdin is changing that and bringing the skill into the 21st century.

Ventriloquism was always meant to be funny. You could be technically the greatest ventriloquist in the world, but if you aren't funny then what's the point?"

The 37-year-old has had shows at the Edinburgh Comedy Festival for the last three years and carved out a comedic career for himself on the live circuit as well as on TV.

"I think some ventriloquists have given it a bad name, but there are some amazing people around. Having worked on the circuit for a number of years and at The Comedy Store. there are few acts like me, which is great because we stay unique.

"A regular stand-up show will have four or five straight comedians and then I come out with the puppets. That will be the one you remember - people like something different."

Our age of reality TV has, maybe surprisingly, been good news for performers such as Zerdin.

"I have done four Royal Variety shows now, but the timing of the last one [2009] was very good. Variety had come back into fashion thanks to things like Britain's Got Talent, so there was a lot of luck. But you need that.

"When you say ventriloquist now, it is not some old bloke with a doll that scares people.

It's new, it's edgy."
With his "Muppet-type puppets", Zerdin has moved to the sharp end of the comedy circuit.

"It is not a kids' show. It's for anyone over the age of 15 because there's a lot of swearing. People in the past have thought that, because there are puppets, it's a family show. It isn't. It's an adult stand-up comedy show. I am a ventriloquist, but don't hold that against methe show is funny, I promise.'

And it is not just Zerdin's cotton characters like Sam, The Baby and The Old Man who make an appearance. Audience members have a big part to play, too.

"I get a man and a woman – they have got these new mouths, which have been created specially. The man's is very over the top and butch and the woman has a very beautiful. feminine face, so I give them voices to match.

"They end up getting into a bit of an argument and it turns out they have marital problems. I then start counselling them. There is a moment that I leave them to it and I'm still voicing it. I don't think that has ever been done before, so that's me taking it to the next level.

"They are in charge of their own limbs, but I can get them walking around doing all sorts of things. I won't give much away, but it's almost like going to watch Paul McKenna make people do silly things, but they aren't hypnotised. It's amazing what you can get people to do.'

But as many comedians and Blue Peter presenters will testify, there is a very real danger in involving people in scripted routines.

"It has gone wrong before. One couple were too enthusiastic. The audience didn't go for it because they thought they were stooges. I learned from that - there's a knack to picking people.

'After a while, you get a feel for what people will do naturally and you can almost pre-empt it, but then they do something you haven't thought of and it can be hilarious, so you try to get people to do the same thing next time.

Zerdin's first TV work came when just 17 with children's show Tricky Business, before he moved on to another kids' show, Hangar 17.

It wasn't until he was 24 that the showman appeared on ITV's successful reality programme Big, Big, Talent Show, with Jonathan Ross as presenter. Do you remember that one? Well, he won it and went on to bag spots on The Royal Variety Performance. Zerdin is, however, clear about the twists and turns of showbiz.

"Television is very fickle and, although I have had some successes on things like the Royal Variety, it eats you up and spits you out.

"I was conscious that if I couldn't stay on TV I wanted to make a living doing live stuff. You have got to work the clubs ... TV comes and goes. I can still work in comedy clubs, go on cruise ships and I have been to entertain the troops and also Las Vegas. You can always work if you have got an act."

Indeed, a return to the small screen beckons, with a new pilot to be filmed this year.

"The TV show is a sitcom with me and the characters, so it's like Seinfeld meets the Muppets, and if I can get that off the ground I might be seen in a different light and get to do a bit of acting or something off the back of it.

"The age we live in now, anything is possible and the people you do see becoming celebrities have no experience or necessary talent whatsoever. So if you have got a talent, it puts you in a better position – but who knows?

■ Paul Zerdin: Puppet Master comes to The Orchard Theatre, Dartford, on Wednesday, October 17. Tickets are priced at £17.50 and available at www.orchardtheatre.co.uk; alternatively, you can phone 01322 220000.

Calling all young chefs: this is the chance for your talents to shine running young-people's cooking competition in the county, the Kent Young Chef Award, is under way. This autumn, dozens of schools and hundreds of students prepare to compete for the coveted junior and senior titles open to students in year groups 7 to 11.

The Produced in Kent-inspired competition gives Kent's aspiring young chefs and cooks the opportunity to devise and write an original main-course dish to serve two people that features regional and seasonal ingredients from the county.

Two-time champion Alice Browning, of Walderslade Girls School in Chatham, one day hopes to compete on BBC Two's MasterChef: The Professionals, work with celebrity chef Richard Phillips and then run her own restaurant.

She said: "For anyone who loves cooking from scratch, I would really encourage you to enter this competition. I have always dreamed of becoming a professional chef and this competition is just the best accolade an aspiring young chef could hope to achieve in Kent.

"For any of you who make it to the live final, you'll have an unforgettable experience. I've made it to the final three years in a row now and have loved it every time."

ON A PLATE: Phoebe Icke, the 2011 junior winner

The authors behind the eight best menu entries will head to the kitchens and restaurant at K College, Tonbridge, on Friday, November 23, to compete in the live final in front of a panel of judges headed by celebrity chef Richard Phillips, one of Kent's top restaurateurs. He will be joined by new judge Robert Kirby, chef director at co-sponsor Lexington Catering.

All finalists will walk away with a fantastic selection of prizes, as well as a memorable oneday cookery experience and lunch in one of Phillips's top restaurants – The Hengist, Thackeray's or The Windmill Inn.

Speaking about his involvement in the competition over the past three years, Phillips said: "For the county's would-be future chefs, the Kent Young Chef Award is an amazing first step on the ladder, with the chance for eight talented young individuals to transform their original recipe ideas from paper to plate at the exciting final.

"Several of the finalists have been inspired to go on and pursue a career as a professional chef and Produced in Kent's competition is a great thing to be involved in, whether you want to be the next top professional chef or you simply love cooking."

Go to www.producedinkent.co.uk to download your entry form. Your main-course recipe can be fish, meat or vegetarian and should predominantly feature ingredients that are in season in the autumn and are grown or reared in Kent. The closing date for entries is Friday, November 2.

The Lawson Trio

The Town Hall, DealMonday, October 8
01304 370220
www.dealfestival.co.uk

THE first of Deal Festival's autumn concerts takes place this month featuring The Lawson Piano Trio.

Emerging as a hugely popular classical ensemble, the Lawson Trio enjoy a busy concert schedule, playing all over the world.

Their most recent concert at the Southbank Centre was broadcast live on BBC Radio 3's Live in Concert programme, with excerpts being selected for the Editor's Highlights webpage.

The concert will include renditions of classic trio compositions by Dvořák and Shostakovich. The show will be the perfect way to kick-start the Deal Festival concerts for 2012.

Tickets are available online.

Laughter is on Amos agenda

Man of talents

Quarterhouse, Folkestone Wednesday, October 10 01303 858500 www.quarterhouse.co.uk

TOP stand-up Stephen K Amos returns to Kent with his new live tour, Laughter Is My Agenda.

The maestro of feelgood comedy and a star of television and radio, Amos could be on to a huge success with the new show after a sell-out season at this year's Edinburgh Festival.

Having already released a number of DVDs and having a prime-time show on BBC2 in the last five years, the comedian has become one of the most recognisable faces in British comedy.

A gifted actor and impressionist, Amos flips between his subtle, politically-aware, dry wit to a childlike enthusiasm and exuberance.

Doors open at 8pm and tickets cost £17. Over-16s only.

Tribute to the King of Pop

Jackson Live

The Orchard, Dartford

Thursday, October 18 01322 220000 www.orchardtheatre.co.uk

AMIR Sharma's portrayal of Michael Jackson is reckoned to be one of the most vocallyand visually-accurate tributes to the King of Pop around.

Sharma has toured around the world and is joined onstage by a cast of musicians, singers and dancers, who together re-create the unmistakable Michael Jackson experience.

There are classic renditions of all the favourite hits such as Thriller, Billie Jean, Beat It and Smooth Criminal.

Jackson Live comes complete with dance moves and full backing band, so don't delay – moonwalk down to The Orchard today!

Pre-show dining is available. Tickets cost £19-£20 for adults and £15.50 for children.

The beat just got heavier

The Hoosiers

Winter Gardens, Margate Friday, December 7

01843 292795 margatewintergardens.co.uk

THREE years after The Hoosiers first stormed the charts with their feelgood brand of fizzy pop, the boys are back with a new album. Hit singles such as Goodbye Mr A and Worried About Ray had The Hoosiers at the very top of the UK pop charts. But now with new record Bumpy Ride in the offing, the group have found a new sound.

Out went the skippy beats, the perky melodies and silly costumes... in came synths and dancefloor-friendly bass. If you thought you knew The Hoosiers, think again.

This is the first opportunity to see them with their new sound and new look live.

Tickets for the December gig are on sale now and priced at £12

Jekka McVicar

Lullingstone Castle

Saturday, October 20 01322 862114 Tickets £30

LULLINGSTONE Castle and the World Garden will host its fifth annual guest lecture, with the legendary Jekka McVicar lending her advice.

McVicar will be giving a talk on the World of Herbs after a tour of the World Garden with its creator Tom Hart Dyke and then tea in Lullingstone Castle's Great Hall.

Hart Dyke said: "This is the first time we have had a lady lecture at Lullingstone, which we are very pleased about.

"The World Garden used to be a herb garden, managed by my late, inspirational grandmother, so this lecture has special significance for me."

On the garden tour the host will point out key herbs, including Lullingstone lavender, which was discovered as a fluke seedling in the 1950s.

Marcus Brigstocke

Canterbury Festival

Saturday, October 13-Saturday, October 27 Box office 01227 787787 www.caterburyfestival.co.uk

TV presenter and stand-up comedian Marcus Brigstocke is the latest act to sign up for the 2012 Canterbury Festival.

The arts festival has previously attracted audiences of 70,000 people of all ages to 200 free and ticketed events, and this year's selection will do nothing to cut that number.

Brigstocke, who brings his new show The Brig Society, is known for his panel-show appearances as well as being one of the team captains on Dave's Argumental.

Elsewhere, musician Van Morrison will play during the event, as will folk artist Seth Lakeman.

Charity casino and gala night

Dover Marina Hotel & Spa Saturday, October 20 01304 203633

events@dovermarinahotel.co.uk

YOU can party like you're in a Las Vegas casino this month, all in aid of Kent Air Ambulance.

The Dover Marina Hotel & Spa will be hosting a charity gala dinner and dance, which includes a casino and auction.

A five-course meal will be served up, with entertainment provided by Rat Pack singer Martin Croons, along with a chance to strut your stuff on the floor.

Punters can take a spin on casino tables and bid on a charity auction hosted by a celebrity auctioneer, all for £49.95 per ticket.

There will also be a cocktail reception at 6.30pm with magician Etienne Pradier.

Alternatively, opt for the overnight break from £79.95 per person, which includes the evening plus a standard double room with breakfast.

Stumbling into Tumblewater

Rural theatre

Rolvenden village hall

Sunday, October 7, at 3pm 07874 214916 rolvendenvh@gogglemail.com

TEASEL Theatre Company is performing Grisly Tales From Tumblewater in Rolvenden as part of the Applause Autumn 2012 season.

It's a bit of Dickens meets

Roald Dahl via Horrible Histories with laughs, frights and music.

The storyline is set in the grim town of Tumblewater. Caspian Prye, the twisted landowner, controls everything and everyone – even the police.

Into this world stumbles
Daniel Dorey, a fearless orphan armed only with his wits and a satchel of spine-chilling stories. Can he bring down
Caspian Prye? Can he rescue
the girl in the distant room?
Can he even stay alive?

The show is suitable for children over eight. Take a look at www.teaseltheatre.co.uk.

Alex Katz

Turner Contemporary, Margate

Saturday, October 6-Sunday, January 13 01843 233000

www.turnercontemporary.org

THIS autumn, the remarkable work of one of America's most important and respected living artists, Alex Katz, comes to Margate.

An exhibition under the title Give Me Tomorrow will see a selection of Katz's works from the 1950s to now, including paintings, collages and a 3D cut-out.

Born in New York in 1927, Katz's prolific career spans six decades of classical themes, including portraiture, landscape and flowers.

His paintings are bright, bold and capture an everyday America of easy living, leisure and recreation. There is an emphasis on Katz's seascapes and beach scenes, including images of his family holidays in Lincolnville, Maine.

From Russia with true love

Swan Lake

Central Theatre, Chatham

Sunday, October 21 01634 338 338 www.medwayticketslive.co.uk

THIS month you can experience the magic of Swan Lake as the Russian State Ballet and Opera House brings the classic ballet to Medway.

Tchaikovsky's classic tale was composed in 1875 and remains one of the most well-known ballets of all time.

First performed at Moscow's Bolshoi Theatre in 1877 as The Lake of Swans, the ballet tells the story of Odette, a young princess who is turned into a swan by an evil sorcerer and can be saved only by true love.

The famous Russian State Ballet has ensured that this classic show remains just as spellbinding, showcasing the skills of 45 dancers.

Tickets are priced from £21-£22. Concessions are available.

HOMES

priced out of local homes

HOUSING associations across the UK have united to campaign for Rural Housing Week as rising prices show thousands of people are being priced out of rural communities.

New research from the National Housing Federation (NHF) shows that in 2011 average house prices rose to 14 times annual incomes in rural Kent, while prices in urban areas were only 11 times annual incomes.

In urban areas. the average house price was f211.019. while the average salary was £19,822. In rural areas, however, the average house price was £294,048, while the average salary was £20,698.

This means that while house prices in villages are 39 per cent higher than in towns, salaries are only 4 per cent higher. The figures back research showing that people are concerned about rural housing costs.

Almost two-thirds of people living in the countryside believe there is a lack of affordable housing where they live, according to an NHF survey

More than seven out of 10 felt families and young people were being priced out of rural living, with seven out of 10 saying they would support a small number of homes being built for local people.

Warren Finney, South East lead manager at the NHF, said:

'The countryside is a way of life for Kent, with around 33 per cent of the Kent population living in rural areas compared with only 27 per cent nationwide.

"With rural areas so much less affordable than urban areas, too many people are being priced out of their own towns and villages.

"This has a serious effect on local economies and local families, with 400 village shops and 700 rural pubs closing down every year nationwide.

"Rural Housing Week is a chance for countryside towns and villages to fight for the affordable housing they need."

Figures reveal rural people 'Slight unease' as Clegg reveals 'pension for property' proposal

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

THE National Association of Pension Funds says it is "slightly uneasy" about plans to allow people to use their pension pot as a guarantee to help their children raise a deposit to buy their first home – a proposal put forward by deputy prime minister Nick Clegg.

The Department for Work and Pensions and the Treasury are working on plans to allow parents and grandparents to use up to 25 per cent of their pension to guarantee first-time-buyer mortgage deposits by setting aside part or all of their future taxfree cash lump sum entitlement.

NAPF chief executive Ioanne Segars said: "There are housing market tensions which need addressing, but we wonder if this is a good solution. We need to see more detail on how this might work.

"At first glance, this idea leaves us feeling slightly uneasy. A pension can only be spent once and this policy could end up leaving retirees out of pocket. The UK already has a serious problem with people saving too little for their old age.

"The Government has already looked at letting people have early access to their pensions and decided against it.

"People need to keep their pension for their retirement, especially with rising

BIG IDEA: Nick Clegg wants up to 25 per cent of a person's pension pot to be used as deposit longevity and the costs of long-term care." Association of British Insurers directorgeneral Otto Thoreson says: "We would want to look closely at the detail of the 'pension for property' scheme announced by Nick Clegg.

"Pensions are designed to mature into a decent retirement income, not for other purposes. Any scheme which uses pensions as a guarantee must ensure that it does not inadvertently make the saver worse off when they retire.

HYUNDAI'S original Santa Fe was the Korean marque's first SUV and is credited with establishing the marque in the US – home of this utility market sector.

It didn't hurt to have a name evoking the famous Santa Fe Trail, a gruelling 900-mile Wild West trade route. Santa Fe means 'Holy Faith' in Spanish, so you get the picture.

And the car has lived up to its rugged namesake and Hyundai's robust five-year/unlimited-mileage warranty.

The new third-generation car will surely maintain this no-nonsense tradition but has also gained far more style, with lines inspired by a brewing storm.

Whether or not you can pick out this socalled 'Storm Edge', the latest Santa Fe is a looker and the ticket price is attractive, too.

OK, it's not quite the bargain it was – the previous range started at about £23,000, while the newcomer begins at £25,495 – but buyers do get much more.

It still offers five or seven seats, depending on model, but you can now buy a more economical front-wheel-drive version.

Safety kit has also been boosted with an active hood to aid pedestrian safety – the first on a Hyundai – a lane-departure warningsystem that's a potential lifesaver in 'tired driver' situations, plus seven airbags. Rear load space is a class-best 534 litres with the front five seats upright, and all rear seats can be flopped down quickly with a one-touch release.

Hyundai's shift from value to aspirational brand is also evident in technology you don't see; a lightweight/high-strength steel and aluminium body, contributing to some deft handling for a car of this bulk. Of course, there is some body-roll on the bends, as expected from most SUVs, but I'll accept that for the Santa Fe's on-road refinement and ride comfort.

The car also features Flex Steer, already seen on the Hyundai i30 family hatchback and allowing three settings – normal, comfort and sport – particularly effective for a larger car, where you want a light touch when parking but more feel at higher speeds.

The cabin is airy and well trimmed and the dashboard well organised; this time round, Hyundai has also brought the Santa Fe in line with its other models by mounting the indicator stalk to the right. Continental style.

There's just one engine, a tweaked 197PS (195bhp) version of the refined 2.2-litre turbodiesel carried over from the previous car and highly capable, even when towing up to the car's maximum 2,500-kilo braked trailer weight.

Hyundai has made the gearbox choice harder, though, with a lightweight and frugal auto for the 4x4 version, capable of returning 41.5mpg on the official combined cycle against 46.3mpg for the six-speed manual. The front-wheel-drive eco version is offered with the manual only and offers 47.9mpg combined.

Hyundai's new-look Santa Fe is not quite the bargain it once was but compensates for its slight increase in price with better safety features and impressive cabin space

... to hear the continual badge-snobbery about brands like Hyundai, since here is an SUV worthy of comparison with far more expensive models.

■ NOT SURE

... the entry price is quite low enough when you consider that this only buys you front-wheel-drive, but the 4x4s versions are real bargains.

Sign up fast for Jaguar F-Type

ORDER books have opened for the hottest new sports car – the all-new F-Type Jaguar (from £58,500).

It won't hit showrooms until early summer 2013 – but don't expect to walk in and just buy one as there will be a long waiting list by then.

Spiritual successor to the legendary 1960s E-Type, the car offers supercharged 3.0-litre V6 or 5.0-litre power.

Rapid makes it Skoda seven

SKODA says its all-new Rapid saloon, set to slot in between the Fabia supermini and next Octavia family model, will sell from just £12,900 when it arrives at dealers on Monday, November 12.

Four petrol and one diesel engine will be offered, and it gives Skoda a seven-strong car line-up, confirming the VW-owned Czech marque as a serious player in the UK mainstream market

A-Class to win style battle?

MERCEDES-BENZ will shake up the premium hatchback sector in December with a new-look A-Class, priced from £18.945.

Ditching the mini-MPV profile of its two predecessors, the low-slung third-generation model should now be a handful for the sector's current stars, the BMW 1 Series and Audi A3.

Tempting PCP deals from £249 a month should also help sales.

Suzuki's 'omen' reveals shape of things to come for its rivals

By Steve Loader

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

SUZUKI has spooked rivals with its new sports saloon, the Kizashi.

The name is Japanese for an omen or warning – seemingly a broad hint to rivals that there are scarier things to come.

It's also come from nowhere; Suzuki has been a bit of a bits-and-pieces motor-manufacturer, flitting in and out of car sectors over the years and still best known for small cars and affordable 4x4s.

Suddenly, though, Japan's No 4 carmaker is muscling into the family-car sector with the handsome-looking Kizashi.

It's not flawless, and Suzuki expects to have sold just 500 by the end of 2012, especially as it's offered with just the one powertrain for now, a 178PS (176bhp) 2.4-litre four-cylinder petrol engine saddled with a continuously-variable transmission (CVT) auto gearbox.

It's not a combination guaranteed to seduce tax-conscious company-car user-choosers; the 191g/km CO2 emissions, for instance, mean the first year's road tax is £460 before settling to a still-daunting £250 a year.

However, private buyers might still like the cut of this well-made car, which comes fully-loaded with kit for just £21,995, including all-wheel-drive, and is visually far more exciting that others on their potential short-list, such as the now tired-looking current Skoda Octavia or Seat's reborn Audi A4, the Exeo.

Not surprisingly, the all-wheel-drive makes the Kizashi pretty agile and grippy, though it will be interesting to see how it might fare with a simple front-wheel-drive layout, already available elsewhere in the world.

It's also possible that Suzuki might follow up with a real performance special boasting a 3.6-litre petrol unit, as well as a tax-friendly 2.0-litre turbodiesel – a must if Suzuki wants serious UK volume for the Kizashi.

For now, though, we must judge it by this

SUZUKI KIZASHI 2.4 AWD: PRICE £13,499

single 2.4 auto powertrain – and it's something of a mixed bag.

The choice of a CVT transmission is unusual at this level but perhaps not surprising given that a 2.4 petrol engine could be a lot heavier on fuel if fitted with a conventional auto box.

Even better than either would be a doubleclutch auto like VW's DSG unit, but, even with the German giant now owning 20 per cent of Suzuki, that's a family heirloom VW might want to keep to itself and wholly-owned subsidiaries.

So, while the Kizashi's CVT box might allow a combined fuel-consumption figure of 39mpg if driven carefully, it's noisy and restraining if you try to exploit the engine's power and the impressive chassis.

The best option by far is to select the six allocated gear settings manually via paddles on the steering wheel, but it's still not particularly fluid and the irony here might be that the anticipated diesel, plus a six-speed manual gearbox and front-wheel drive, could be more of a driverpleaser than this all-singing, all-dancing allwheel-drive model.

There's much to admire elsewhere, though: a smart front end, sharp alloys, slippery overall styling and a standard-fit body kit, plus nice details like the two trapezoidal exhaust orifices, a proper electric sunroof, smart and durable leather seating – including electric adjustment for the front pair – eight-speaker sound system and a well-arranged dashboard.

Interior space is also surprisingly good given the car's compact on-road footprint; rear legroom is the biggest surprise, although the penalty is a smaller boot for this class.

But perhaps this review is less about a car for which Suzuki currently has modest aspirations and more about what it represents; a 'kizashi' or warning of Suzuki's ambitions for the UK market.

NEW WAY FORWARD: Suzuki's unveiling of its single 2.4 auto powertrain – and it's something of a mixed bag. The choice of a CVT transmission is unusual at this level but perhaps not surprising given

CR-V evolves into fourth generation

By Steve Loader

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

HONDA'S fourth-generation CR-V model arrives in showrooms this month, marking a return to more practical ways while still cutting a dash with style.

Anxious to distance itself from so-called gasguzzlers in the SUV/4x4 sector, Honda appeared to smooth and refine the previous car to the point where it was more a high-riding estate and sacrificed the rear load area's practicality on the altar of style – not that successfully, to some eyes.

The newcomer (from £21,395) looks far sharper, while a more conventional rear end promises better 'crammability'.

And it will distance itself still further from profligate rivals by gaining an 'eco star' version next September, using front-wheel-drive only and Honda's impressive new ultra-lightweight 1.6-litre diesel – with 94g/km of CO2 emissions, it will be exempt from road tax.

This is the first drivetrain from Honda's new Earth Dreams Technology engine series for Europe and produced at Honda's Swindon UK plant – also the home of European CR-V production.

The front-wheel-drive option was to be expected as more manufacturers recognise consumers have finally realised they rarely need 4x4 but want to keep the high driving position and space of an SUV – even Range Rover's new Evoque offers a fuel-efficient front-wheel-drive eco-warrior.

And the CR-V has always enjoyed a premium position in market affections, being regarded as smart, reliable and good to drive.

LOAD-LUGGER: Honda's fourth-genertaion CR-V continues the impressive pedigree of its predecessors and will be joined by an all-new eco version next year

The new car is slightly lower – by 30mm – against its predecessor, yet Honda insists it has as much room as before, while a simple one-pull action allows the rear seats to flop down for extra loading flexibility.

For now, power comes from two familiar but redesigned Honda powertrains: a 2.0-litre i-VTEC petrol engine available as the entry-level 2.0 i-VTEC S model with front-wheel-drive, or a 2.2-litre i-DTEC diesel. Company-car userchoosers will focus on the latter as it retains its 150PS (149bhp) output but now emits 149 g/km of CO2-12 per cent less than before.

Though one of the best drives in its class anyway, Honda has tweaked the chassis to boost ride comfort and high-speed stability, while speed-sensitive electric steering is designed to ease parking and town use while sharpening high-speed response.

The new CR-V is part of a £1.5 billion vote of confidence in UK manufacturing by Honda, investment that has also included the new Civic (December 2011) and the new 1.6-litre diesel engine (December 2012) – the engine will also appear in the British-made Civic hatchback.

The funding has increased the Swindon workforce to 3,500, who, by the end of this year, will have doubled the 2011 car-production total to 183,000 and set the company on course to 250,000 units per year within three years.
